

Out of Africa

In Ethiopia, the Park Scholars find eager students, local wildlife and a country looking for change

PHOTOS BY ZACK WILSON
CONTRIBUTING PHOTOGRAPHER

Above: A black-faced vervet monkey watches visitors eat at the Sodore Resort, a popular vacation spot outside the capital city of Addis Ababa. Right: The Park Scholars spent much of their trip in Addis Ababa, a city with a population of four million.

Left: A keeper at Addis Ababa's zoo tries to provoke the lion to roar for the entertainment of the crowd.

Left: The government recently installed plasma screen televisions in all high school classrooms in Addis Ababa. Lessons are produced in South Africa, Canada and Ethiopia and are then broadcast to the students. The government uses this method to standardize the educational content in schools and to compensate for the shortage of skilled teachers. Above: The Park Scholars visited with Ethiopian children at their homes in the Addis Ababa suburbs.